Did you brush your teeth today?

...yes, sure!

CLEANING

80% of dogs and 70% of cats show signs of periodontal disease by the age of 3

Plaque build-up
Dental plaque is a biofilm formed by food residues, bacteria and their metabolic products.

Tartar and gum inflammation
Tartar is caused by the hardening of plaque by minerals contained in saliva.

Tooth loosening and tooth loss
Periodontal disease is caused by inflammation and receding gums. As a consequence, tooth necks are exposed and the periodontium is damaged.

The consequences Inflammation, bad breath, pain, bacterial burden of the organism and required veterinary treatments under general anaesthesia.

Detecting and preventing of dental diseases

How do you identify if your animal is suffering from diseases of the oral cavity?

Even if your pet is still eating, it may still have significant dental problems. The first indication is often bad breath. If there are additional signs such as increased salivation, gum alteration (reddening/swelling/bleeding tendency) or dental alteration (discoloration/deposits/loosening), you should have your pet examined by a veterinarian.

Which preventive measures can you take?

- ✓ Dental home care: Daily brushing of your pet's teeth with a toothbrush or a finger cot applying a special animal toothpaste is the most effective measure. Particularly recommended for high-risk animals for periodontal disease such as very small or short-headed dogs.
- ✓ Functional dental chews: These dental snacks combine chewing pleasure with a functional effect – active ingredients support dental health in combination with the abrasive effect.
- ✓ Food supplements and drinking water additives: Can also help to reduce the risk of plaque build-up, especially useful in animals with non-cooperative behaviour.

How do you get your pet used to dental home care?

Get your animal used to examinations and manipulations of the oral cavity already at a young age in a playful way. Gentle massages of the gums – at first with the moistened finger only, later with animal toothpaste – prepare your pet for the application of a finger cot or a toothbrush.
